MURDER FRENZY SEIZED BECKWITH; NEAR MARRIAGE

Professor Who Slew Dean
Wharton Faced Another
Dismissal in Disgrace.

RECORD OF FAILURES

Six Colleges and Universities
Had Turned Tutor Out,
Causing Him to Brood.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.
SYRACUSE, April 3.—Ten years of financial, professional and matrimonial disasters that embittered him against the whole world caused Prof. Holmes Beckwith, instructor in banking and finance at Syracuse University, to kill Dean John Herman Wharton of the College of Business Administration and then kill himself.

It became known to-day that since his graduation from the University of California ten years ago Prof. Beckwith had taught in six colleges and universities, and from all of them he had been dismissed in disgrace. It is understood that he was soon to have married a Syracuse woman whose name is not known.

In nearly every instance Prof. Beckwith's trouble followed the inauguration of such rigid discipline that his students became dissatisfied and complained to the college authorities. He began having trouble with his students within a very short time after he came to Syracuse and was considered on the campus as the most rigid disciplinarian the university ever had. He conducted his classes under lock and key, locking the doors as soon as the bell rang for a class. If a student came late he was compelled to knock and was admitted by the professor himself, and for his tardiness he received a cut that counted against him as much as his absence.

It also was noted among the students and members of the faculty that if one of his classes completed its work a few minutes ahead of time he held the students in the classroom until the exact minute scheduled for the closing of the class.

The colleges and universities at which Beckwith taught after leaving California include Dartmouth, Grinnell College, Northwestern University and Colorado College. In each of these he had difficulty with his students and with his superiors and was dismissed, and it was learned to-day that in each of these also he threatened to kill himself and the man immediately responsible for his dismissal. At Grinnell College Beckwith is said to have planned to murder President Maine and then kill himself, but he changed his mind after he had obtained another position. At Northwestern University he frequently said he was going to kill himself, told his associates of his intentions and on one occasion a member of the faculty talked with him for two hours before he finally was dissuaded.

Chancellor Day said to-day that he knew little of Beckwith personally and that for his information concerning the man he had relied on Dean Wharton. "Prof. Beckwith must have been insane," the Chancellor said. "He evidently fancied that he had been unjustly treated, but of course his record is nothing but cases in which he thought injustice had been done him. I know very little of him directly. Dean Wharton came to me some time ago and told me he would be compelled to let Prof. Beckwith go for the good of the department. I had confidence in his judgment, and made no objection, but we thought it would be better to tell Prof. Beckwith immediately, so he would have an opportunity to find other employment. Dean Wharton accordingly told him."

Moonlight Saving Law Cuts Hour of Spooning

CHICAGO, April 3.—The Lincoln Park police issued an ultimatum to springtime spooners yesterday that all amorous demonstrations end promptly at 11 o'clock. Policemen moved through the park last night one hour before midnight "shooing" the spooners out of the park. "Orders is orders," explained Capt. Charles Shaw.

CHESTERTON URGES IRISH NATIONALISM

British Writer Asserts That the Island Is Able to Govern Itself.

G. K. Chesterton advocated Irish nationalism in a lecture on the Irish situation in the Apollo Theatre last night. He showed himself also a destructive critic of the advocates of a world state, notably H. G. Wells.

Chesterton insisted that Ireland is able to govern herself. He said that the religious question is not the root trouble that make a settlement difficult. If the Irish situation had been handled wisely in Gladstone's time the scheme of home rule might have succeeded. He paid his respects to politicians and so-called men of action. The man of action is one who has to act because he is too lazy to think, said Chesterton, and he never decides things on principle. He was referring, the audience understood, to the handling of the Irish problem by English statesmen.

A world state, Chesterton declared in discussing nationalism and internationalism, would become a new excuse for tyranny. "The ties binding nations would be in the hands of a few aristocrats, a perage of globe trotters. It might be, therefore, that the control would be vested in the hands of Jews," he said. "They have established a social oligarchy in Russia and a capitalistic oligarchy in a great many other places."

Chesterton's alternate to the world state is a league of nations which has always seemed perfectly plausible and workable to him. This league would be founded plainly on the principle of frontiers and for defence of nationality. Humanity will be at peace, he said, when it establishes frontiers.

He called the analogy between the civil war in America and the difficulty between England and Ireland a specious analogy. The making of such a parallel was false and dangerous. Chesterton was inclined to agree with Lincoln that there was no Southern nationality or Northern nationality. In answer to questions, he said he believed it would be possible for England and Ireland to preserve their respective nationalisms without danger to each other. Father Francis Duffy introduced the lecturer.

'COUSIN' OF HARDING LANGUISHES IN JAIL

Lacks Bail on Charge of Impersonating U. S. Official.

CHICAGO, April 3.—The dream of Everett A. Harding of relationship to America's Chief Executive was shattered to-day. The self-styled "cousin of President Harding and his confidential secretary" spent the day in the Woodstock (Ill.) jail in default of $5,000 bail and charged with impersonating a Government official.

Secret Service agents learned that months before the Republican National Convention last year young Harding injected himself into the Presidential primary campaign in behalf of "Cousin Warren," representing himself on several occasions as Senator Harding's campaign manager. The Harding headquarters had no knowledge of the young man's activities. Previously he had been active in support of both Gen. Wood and Gov. Lowden.

Everett's victims, the Secret Service men said, included hundreds of prominent Republicans and business men who invested money in what Everett called "Harding enterprises in which Cousin Warren was personally interested."

ARCHBISHOP HAYES ASSAILS DR. PARKS

Charges Rector Wilfully Misrepresented Catholic Attitude on Public Schools.

Speaking yesterday afternoon in the Hippodrome at a reception tendered in his honor by the alumni and faculty of Manhattan College, Archbishop Patrick J. Hayes answered statements concerning the Catholic Church which were made in an address by Dr. Leighton Parks, rector of St. Bartholomew's Church shortly before Easter. Although the Archbishop spoke without mentioning names, Mgr. Joseph P. Dineen, his secretary, stated later that the remarks were meant as a direct reply to Dr. Parks.

"The present occasion affords the first reasonable opportunity to protest publicly against a recent unfair public utterance on the attitude of our Catholic bishops and people toward American ideals and American institutions," Archbishop Hayes said. "I am grieved that such statements should come from where they did. The evidently emotional outburst is a strange mixture of British-American egotism, of racial and religious prejudice and of praise and blame for the Catholic Church."

"It is unpardonable ignorance and wilful misrepresentation to say, as reported in the press, 'Who does not know that it is the Roman Catholic Church which prevents any religious teaching in the schools?' Even a superficial knowledge of the origin and development of our public school system would show that neither the Catholic Church nor Catholic ecclesiastics nor Catholic educators had anything to do with the movement in New England from 1826 to 1850 due to the fierce, uncompromising attack by Horace Mann on religion in the schools of Massachusetts.

"Horace Mann, a bitter enemy of the Catholic Church, successfully brought about the secular system of education we have to-day and divorced religion from education in the public schools. Catholics in New England were too few, too poor, without prestige or influence to be considered during those days. Why not be truthful in face of this historic fact?"

"Moreover, it is absolute nonsense to say that the Catholic Church is trying to destroy the public schools. We plead with all our being for State public schools that will not ignore religion. We are most willing to work for some arrangement, satisfactory to the conscience of Jew, Protestant and Catholic, whereby the religious faith of the public school children may be preserved and strengthened according to the tenets of their respective churches. It is done in England, Canada and Germany. Why not here?"

The Archbishop said he would welcome an inquiry into the "American character" of Catholic schools, which he described as standing like "a fortified city, a pillar of iron and a wall of brass" against anarchy, radicalism and every foe of America, within and without.

Other speakers were John E. Kirrin, '99, president of the alumni society; Mgr. John P. Chidwick, '83; Luke D. Stapleton, former Gov. Smith and W. Bourke Cockran, Victor Herbert, Mma. Marguerite Namara of the Chicago Opera Company, Charles Hackett of the Metropolitan Opera Company, the Glee Club of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and the Hippodrome orchestra rendered musical numbers.
